Double Tragedy, in Which Husband and Wife Die, Exciting Widespread Interest,

THE JURY'S VERDICT SUICIDE

This Conclusion Not Unanimous. People Were Mountaineers.

[Special to The Times-Dispetch.] WASHINGTON, VA., April 3 .- The Inding of the dead bodies of Henry Poster and his wife, Annie Foster, near the top of Peak Mountain, in a county, as already related h Tho limes-Dispatch, has excited much in-triest, and a circumstantial account of the double tragedy will doubties bo

the double tragedy will doubties be cagerly read.

Foster left the house in the morning of the 29th instant, his wifelfollowing him, and remained away from the house some time, when she returned. When asked by her sister-inlaw, Mrs. Jack Foster, where Honry was, she replied that he said he wis going to a neighbor's to buy some of lon sets, but she did not believe hit. Then about 4:30 F. M. Mrs. Annie Foster left the house, going in the direction of where the bodies were later found, and after she had been gone a few minutes the report of a gun was heard by Mrs. Jack Foster, who said she heard a scream, and in a short time she heard the report of a second shot.

Jack Foster, a brother of Henry,

Jack Foster, a brother of Henry, the deceased, owned the house, and the two families lived togother, and Ed. Fester, another brother, lived only a short distance oper, and Jack and Ed. were the first ones to reach the bodies, and found the clothing of Henry on fire; and in order to extinguish the flames it was necessary to nove the dead man, as the body of his wife was partly on that of her his band.

The man was shot just below the heart and his wife was shot just below the breast bone, and the coroner's jury the breast bone, and the coroner's jury rendered a verdict that both came to ir death by gunshot wounds, which were self-inflicted.

A short forked stick was found near the bodies, and the gun was resting on the woman when found.

When Foster left the house he his gun with him, and had three shells

Foster was heard to threaten to take his own life on several occasions, and on the morning of his death told his wife, it is said, that he would kill himself, and she begged him not to do so.

Cause of Suicide

Mrs. Foster was a Miss Corbin. They were married in October, 1906, and she gave birth to a child in December, 1:06, or January, 1907. Foster denied parentage of the child, and this, it is said, was the cause of his killing himself.

One member of the coroner's jury did not believe that it was a case of suicide, but there is no evidence to contradict the verdict, and people in the neighborhood believe that both killed themselves.
Foster is a second cousin of Lillian Young, alias Lillian Riley, who was convicted of criminal assault and sentenced to be hanged by the Circuit Court of this county, and whose sentence was commuted to life imprisonment.

The place of the tragedy is near the top of "The Peak," one of the highest points of the Blue Ridge in this section, and at the head of "Horseshoe Hollow," and while the house and little mountain farm are plainly visible from this place, it is about three miles from here, and almost inaccessible.
